IN a coup d'état of the sort which has made the Balkans a favorite setting for light opera, the prince who renounced royalty for love of a junk dealer's daughter has descended on Bucharest by airplane to assume the Rumanian crown as Carol II after nearly five years of exile. Now 36 years old, he has been a stormy career ever since in 1918 he fled to Odessa, Russia, with Zizi Lambrino, the daughter of a Rumanian major, and they were married there. Tried as an army deserter, he was confined for seventy-five days in a military fortress and then sent on a world tour to forget his bride.

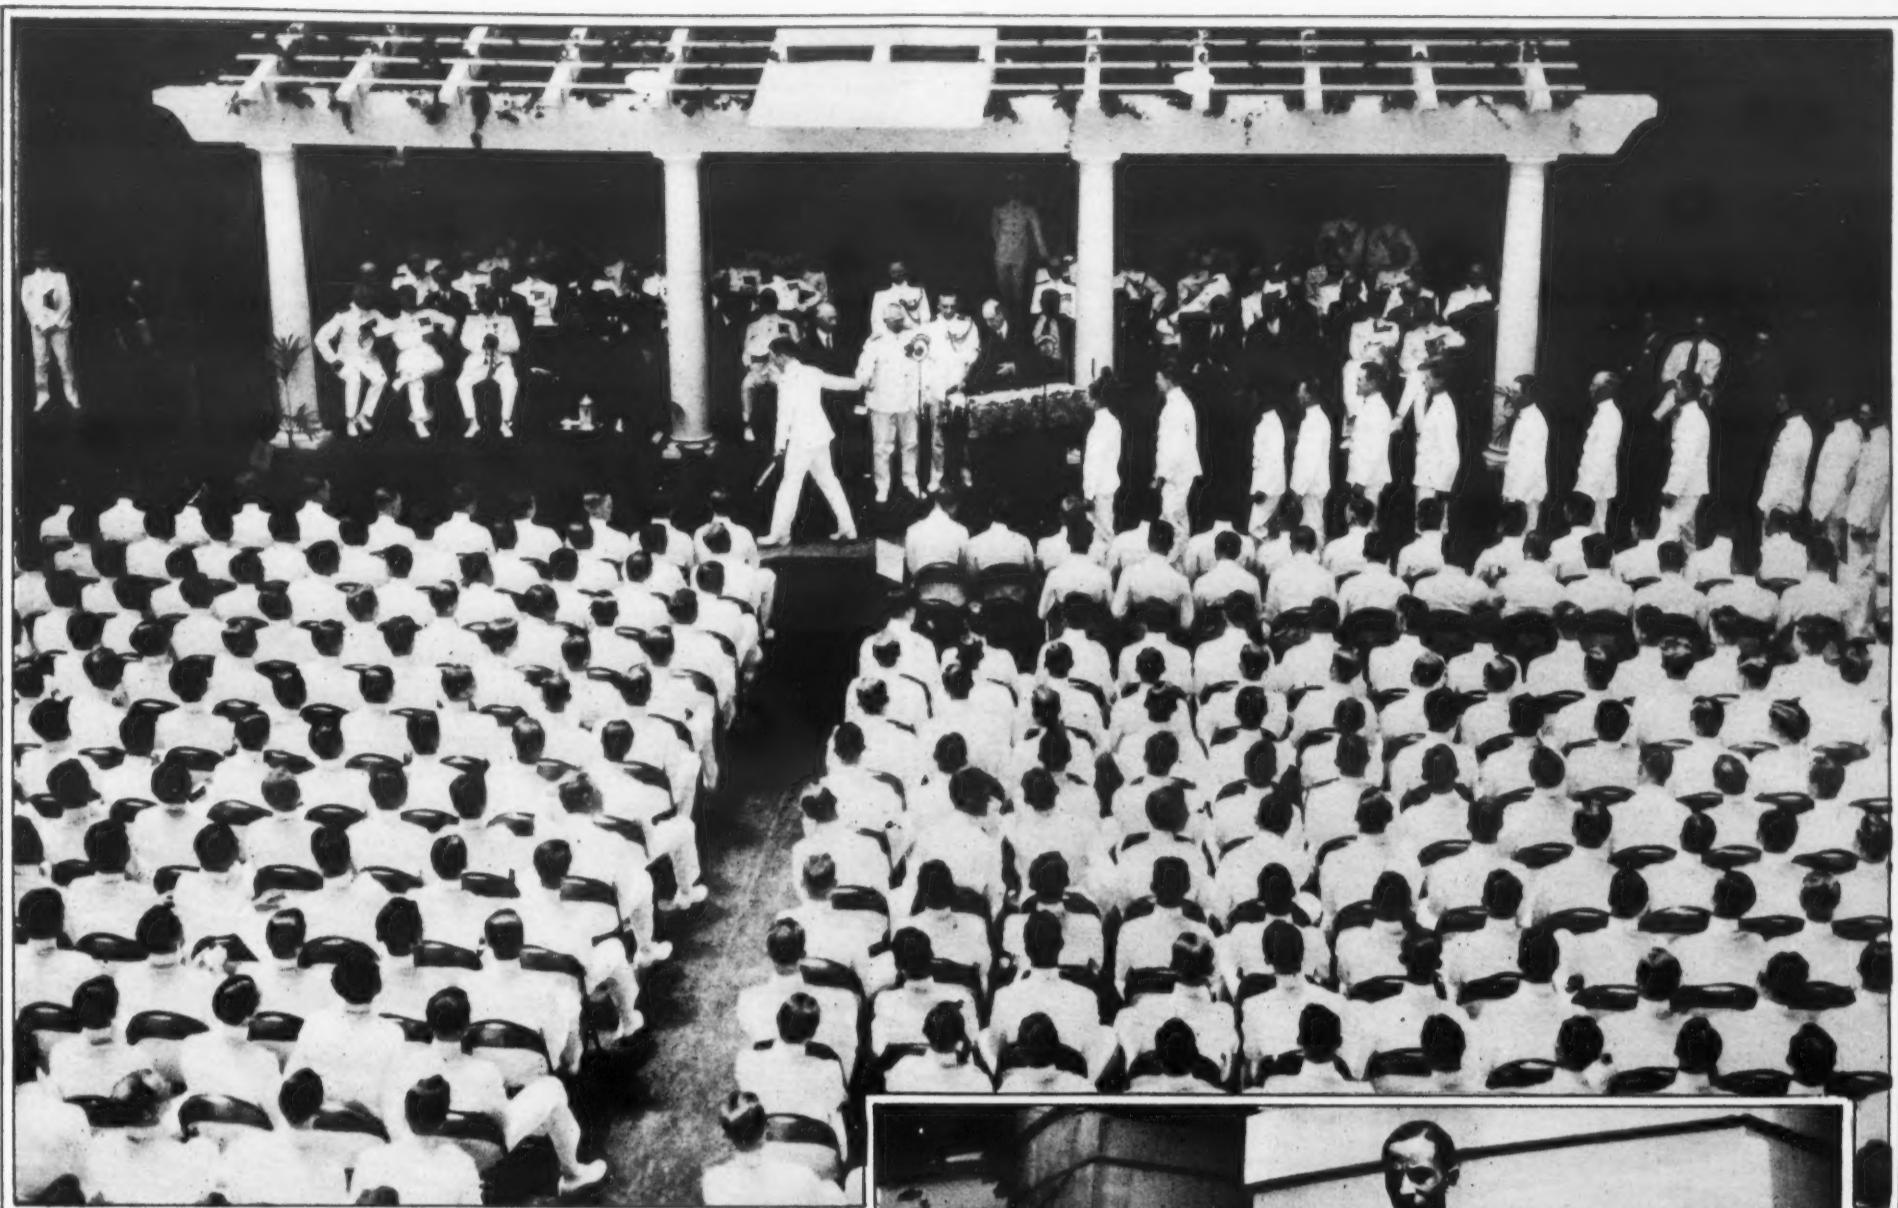

In March, 1921, he married Princess Helen of Greece, and it was their son who was crowned as King Michael after King Ferdinand died on July 20, 1927. For meanwhile Carol had fallen in love again, this time with the junk dealer's daughter, Mme. Magda Lupescu, and late in 1925 had renounced his rights as Crown Prince. Though Carol at first refused to recognize the Boy King, he was forced to remain in exile, and Princess Helen obtained a divorce. His plotings in Paris were futile for years, but at last a new shift in Rumania's complicated politics has enabled him to return and, with the sanction of Parliament, to occupy the throne.

THE simple jacket, guiltless of frills or furbelows, remains the most desired and most chic of sport types. It is apt to be shorter this year than for some seasons, a reflection of the bolero mode; it may be belted or straight, self-collared or scarfed, but it values tailored simplicity above all the artifices of the much-discussed feminine tendency in the mode, and depends on the correctness of its accessories for the final touch of interest.

FIVE NATIONAL VIEWS OF THE LONDON NAVAL TREATY

DAVID JAYNE HILL, American Diplomat, explains the United States reception of the London naval pact as being dependent on the necessity for parity with Great Britain.

H. WICKHAM STEED, British Editor, tells of the relief, rather than the satisfaction, with which Great Britain welcomed the conclusion of the conference.

J. DOCTEUR, French Admiral, justifies the French stand at the conference by saying that she could not reduce her armaments without guarantees of security.

CARLO SCHANZER, Italian Senator, puts the blame for the failure of the conference to achieve a five-power pact largely on the French demand for naval armaments superior to those of Italy.

K. K. KAWAKAMI, Japanese Publicist, depicts Japanese opinion as neither entirely satisfied nor entirely dissatisfied with the treaty.

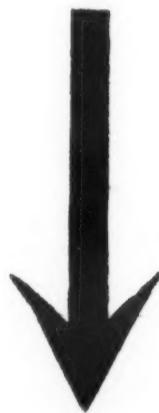

The newsy character of the contents of CURRENT HISTORY is such that it is not possible to lay out a definite statement of articles several issues ahead—what will be in it from month to month will depend on what will happen in an important way in the world and among its peoples.

CURRENT HISTORY was established to chronicle, not criticize. To record authoritatively and impartially those happenings and events which should be part of the knowledge of every well-informed person.
